Starting with ourselves

BY JEFFREY M. HARRIS
 CHICAGO TRIBUNE

It's a common refrain: "We need to start with ourselves." But what does that mean? It's a phrase that's been used for decades, and it's one that's often used to deflect blame or to avoid taking responsibility. In the context of the current crisis, it's a phrase that's been used to suggest that we should focus on our own problems rather than on the problems of others. But that's not what it means. It means that we need to start with ourselves, and that means that we need to take responsibility for our own actions and for the actions of those around us. We need to stop blaming others and start looking at ourselves. We need to stop making excuses and start taking responsibility. We need to stop looking for someone else to blame and start looking at ourselves. We need to stop making excuses and start taking responsibility. We need to stop looking for someone else to blame and start looking at ourselves.

Praying with fire

Prayer is a powerful tool, and it's one that many people turn to in times of crisis. In the case of the recent wildfires in California, many firefighters and residents alike have found solace in prayer. Some have even reported miraculous events, such as fires mysteriously going out or flames being redirected. While the scientific explanation for these events is often unclear, the power of prayer is undeniable. For many, it provides a sense of hope and comfort in the face of adversity.

The wildfires in California have been a devastating event, with thousands of homes and businesses destroyed. The fires have also caused significant environmental damage, with large areas of forest being burned to the ground. In the face of such tragedy, many people have turned to prayer for help. Some have prayed for the firefighters, asking for their safety and success. Others have prayed for the victims, asking for their recovery and comfort. The power of prayer is a force to be reckoned with, and it's one that we should all have faith in.

U&A ECONOMISTS FORECAST

Services to drive 2005 growth

By Mark H. Ross

The U.S. economy is expected to continue its growth in 2005, with services playing a key role. The U.S. Commerce Department's Bureau of Economic Analysis (BEA) has released its latest forecast, which predicts that the economy will grow at a rate of 3.5% in 2005. This is a slight increase from the 3.2% growth rate in 2004. The BEA also predicts that the unemployment rate will remain relatively stable, at around 5.5%.

The forecast is based on a number of factors, including the strength of the services sector. The services sector is expected to continue its growth, with a particular focus on the technology and healthcare industries. The technology industry is expected to continue its rapid growth, with a particular focus on the software and internet industries. The healthcare industry is also expected to continue its growth, with a particular focus on the pharmaceutical and medical device industries.

The forecast also takes into account the impact of the recent hurricanes in the Gulf of Mexico. The hurricanes are expected to have a negative impact on the economy, particularly in the energy sector. However, the BEA predicts that the impact will be temporary, and that the economy will continue its growth in 2005.

Don't let a rising gas price drive you crazy

By Mark H. Ross

As gas prices continue to rise, many drivers are looking for ways to save money. One of the most effective ways to save is by carpooling. Carpooling can help reduce the number of cars on the road, which can help reduce traffic congestion and air pollution. It can also help save money on gas, as the cost is split among more people. Carpooling is a simple and effective way to save money on gas, and it's one that everyone should consider.

Another way to save money on gas is by using a gas price comparison website. These websites allow you to compare gas prices at different stations in your area. This can help you find the cheapest gas station, which can help you save money on your gas bill. Gas price comparison websites are a useful tool for anyone looking to save money on gas.

PS&M to bid out idle Napocor power plants

By Mark H. Ross

The Philippine State Electricity Corporation (PSE) has announced that it will be bidding out its idle power plants. The PSE is a state-owned utility company that is responsible for the distribution of electricity in the Philippines. It has a number of power plants that are currently idle, and it is looking for private companies to bid to operate them. The PSE is hoping to find companies that can operate the plants more efficiently and at a lower cost.

The PSE is also looking for companies that can help it modernize its power grid. The power grid in the Philippines is in need of modernization, and the PSE is looking for companies that can help it do this. The PSE is hoping to find companies that can help it improve the reliability and efficiency of its power grid.

The PSE is also looking for companies that can help it develop new power sources. The PSE is looking for companies that can help it develop renewable energy sources, such as wind and solar power. The PSE is hoping to find companies that can help it diversify its energy portfolio and reduce its reliance on fossil fuels.

Rollback in local oil prices seen this month

Oil prices are expected to drop this month, which could lead to a rollback in local oil prices. The price of oil has been rising steadily over the past few months, and many consumers are looking for a way to save money. A rollback in oil prices would be a welcome relief for many consumers, as it would help reduce the cost of gas and other oil-based products.

The rollback in oil prices is expected to be temporary, as the price of oil is still expected to rise in the long run. However, it could provide a temporary reprieve for consumers. The rollback in oil prices is a result of a number of factors, including a decrease in demand and an increase in supply.

The rollback in oil prices is a good sign for the economy, as it indicates that demand is still strong. It also indicates that the supply of oil is still sufficient to meet demand. The rollback in oil prices is a temporary relief, but it is a sign that the economy is still growing.

IMF experts push late bailout of ailing banks

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) has urged governments to delay bailing out ailing banks. The IMF is a global organization that provides financial assistance to countries in need. It has a number of experts who are currently working on the issue of bailing out ailing banks. The IMF experts believe that bailing out ailing banks too early could be harmful to the economy. They believe that it is better to wait until the situation is clearer before bailing out the banks.

The IMF experts are also concerned about the cost of bailing out ailing banks. They believe that bailing out ailing banks too early could be very expensive. They believe that it is better to wait until the situation is clearer before bailing out the banks. The IMF experts are also concerned about the impact of bailing out ailing banks on the financial system. They believe that bailing out ailing banks too early could lead to a loss of confidence in the financial system.

The IMF experts are also concerned about the impact of bailing out ailing banks on the real economy. They believe that bailing out ailing banks too early could lead to a loss of confidence in the real economy. They believe that it is better to wait until the situation is clearer before bailing out the banks. The IMF experts are also concerned about the impact of bailing out ailing banks on the global economy. They believe that bailing out ailing banks too early could lead to a loss of confidence in the global economy.

The authorizing provisions of the legislation are not as specific as the earlier law when it came to the language included and excluded before the courts. "One also will notice the absence of specific language that is supposedly barring that it cannot be included in the law."

The constitutionality of the law was argued in two previous proceedings.

It should also be pointed out that the constitutionality of the law was argued in two previous proceedings.

The Common

If you think the technology is a bit too... well... cutting-edge, don't panic. The engineers behind the world's first 'quantum' laptop are confident that the technology will be in the market by 2010, and will be a game-changer for the industry.
